Democratic Leadership.

[Editorial from the Commoner.]

The Brooklyn Eagle recently contained an interview with Senator Patrick McCarren, of Brooklyn, in which he says:

"I think that the national situation is one that affords opportunity to the Democratic party to make an issue on which it might successfully appeal to the people. We have not been on the right side of any public issue since the Civil War. For instance, we were on the wrong side of the Civil War issue, because of the fact that so many of the Democratic states were opposed to the union. Then, intervening between the period of the war and the time of Tilden, we were on the wrong side of the tariff issue. Everybody knows that the election of Tilden was a protest against the methods of the Republican party at that time, and a declaration in favor of a change in the methods of government.

"Since that time we have been on the wrong side of every issue, with the exception of one campaign in which Cleveland was elected. His election was a repetition of the Tilden period. It was an effort on the part of the people to wrest the government from the hands of the Republicans, because of the belief that their methods were high handed and detrimental to the interests of the country.

"Then the Bryan period followed, beginning with the declaration in favor of the unlimited coinage of silver in an arbitrary ration. It is unnecessary to elaborate on recent happenings for the reason that every Democrat today, young and old, realizes the disastrous consequences that have followed the attitude of our party on all the questions that presidential contests are decided on. The patriotism of our country was arrayed against us because of our attitude on questions following the Spanish war. Our anti-expansion stand, lined up young American voters against us. While I have never voted anything but a Democratic ticket in my life, and have worked for no other than the candidates for Democracy, I did so in the belief and with the feeling in many campaigns that I was pursuing a forlorn hope, because of the realization of the exact that the position of our party would not be endorsed by a majority of voters.

"It is evident, to my mind, that we must put ourselves on that side of national issues that will be endorsed by the voters, and the sooner we do it the better. The result of the last election, it seems to me, is so pointed that there can be no controverting the statement that there can be no controverting the statement that the American people will not stand for radical theories in the affairs of our government. To my mind, Mr. Taft was elected because he was suspected of being conservative."

Before commenting on this interview, The Commoner took occasion to make inquiry and ascertain that Senator McCarren had been correctly quoted, and it is brought to the attention of the readers of The Commoner because it illustrates the embarrassments under which the Democratic party has labored. In a war no great hope of victory could be entertained if the armies were officered by men who were opposed to the principles for which the army was fighting. For instance, a man who believed in monarchy would not be a good person to lead an army fighting to establish popular government, and so a man who believes that the Democratic party has been on the wrong side of every issue since the civil war is not a good man to lead the Democratic party. Assuming that Senator McCarren honestly did the best he could in the late campaign, it must be apparent to every reasonable man that he could not arouse enthusiasm among his followers when he confessed that "in many campaigns" he worked with the "feeling" that he was "pursuing a forlorn hope."

The Democratic party is entitled to leaders who are in sympathy with the voters of the party. Someone has defined a leader as one who is going in the same direction as the people, BUT A LITTLE BIT AHEAD, and surely one can not wisely, courageously or successfully lead who is going in an opposite direction from those whom he leads. The men who fight and die in the trenches are entitled to leaders whose hearts are in the fight and who believe that the success of the party will be good for the country.

The Democratic party has been very much handicapped for twelve years, first, by a lack of newspapers in the Eastern States. But few of the large dailies that have supported the ticket have almost without exception repudiated the platform either during the campaign or immediately afterwards. In like manner many of the men who have been at the head of the organization in the East have promptly repudiated the platform as soon as the campaign was over, and have, between campaigns, lent their influence to those who have condemned the Democratic position on public questions. Most of them have not gone as far as Senator McCarren, and yet their influence has been cast against the party rather than for it. In the face of these continual assaults upon the policy of the party, it is astonishing that the party has polled a large vote as it has. It is evidence of the incorruptibility of the Democratic masses that they continue to fight for Democratic principles in spite of the desertion of the party's policies by those who control the organization.

A permanent Democratic club ought to be organized in every county of the United States—a club committed unqualifiedly not merely to the name but to the policies of the party. Such a club is needed more in the East than in the West. Its members ought to devote themselves to the propagation of Democratic doctrine; they ought to establish in every county a local newspaper that will preach Democratic doctrine all the time, and in every primary contest they ought to labor to put the Democratic organization in the hands of those who will make the fight with earnestness and with a confidence in final victory. The Democratic party has been a "house divided against itself," and this has been and is its greatest weakness. It would not strengthen the party of the reform element to cease to fight, for without the reform element the Democratic party would soon be a thing of the past. Will the reform element take up the fight and secure for the next campaign not only a Democratic ticket and Democratic candidates, but an organization which believes in the policies of the party and which will fight for those policies because it believes in them?

The national organization made a splendid fight last year, but in some cases it had to work through local organizations that were lukewarm and through some that were unfriendly to the general purpose of the party. This ought not to be the case again, and it must not be the case if the party is going to make a successful fight.

The Knock-out Blow.

The blow which knocked out Corbett was a revelation to the prize fighters. From the earliest days of the ring the knock-out blow was aimed for the jaw, the temple or the jugular vein. Stomach punches were thrown in to worry and weary the fighter, but if a scientific man had told one of the old fighters that the most vulnerable spot was the region of the stomach, he'd have laughed at him for an ignoramus. Dr. Pierce is bringing home to the public a parallel fact; that the stomach is the most vulnerable organ out of the prize ring as well as in it. We protect our heads, throats, feet and lungs, but the stomach we are utterly indifferent to, until disease finds the solar plexus and knocks us out. Make your stomach sound and strong by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and you protect yourself in your most vulnerable spot. "Golden Medical Discovery" cures "weak stomach," indigestion, or dyspepsia, torpid liver, bad, thin and impure blood and other diseases of the organs of digestion and nutrition.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" has a specific curative effect upon all mucous surfaces and hence cures catarrh, no matter where located or what stage it may have reached. In Nasal Catarrh it is well to cleanse the passages with Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy fluid while using the "Discovery" as a constitutional remedy. Why the "Golden Medical Discovery" cures catarrhal diseases, as of the stomach, bowels, bladder and other pelvic organs will be plain to you if you will read a booklet of extracts from the writings of eminent medical authorities, endorsing its ingredients and explaining their curative properties. It is mailed free on request. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. This booklet gives all the ingredients entering into Dr. Pierce's medicines from which it will be seen that they contain not a drop of alcohol, pure, triple-refined glycerine being used instead. Dr. Pierce's great thousand-page illustrated Common Sense Medical Adviser will be sent free, paper-bound, for 21 one-cent stamps, or cloth-bound for 51 stamps. Address Dr. Pierce as above.
